Although the next session of Congress will last less than three months and is still five months off, an ambitious legislative program is being mapped out for

President Taft desires, it is understood hat all administration measures not disposed of at the last session shall receive early consideration next winter. These left-over bills make up a rather long and formidable list to present to a short session. It includes the bill for the federal incorporation of big combinations of capital, including common carriers; a bill for the regulation of railroad capitalization, based on the recommendations of the commission authorized to investigate the matter by a section of the new railsubsidies and subventions; regulation of injunctions; the bill, passed by the House, to create the Appalachian and White mountain forest reserve; eight conservation measures, only one of those recombeen enacted at the last session; bill for the creation of a bureau or department tion of the postal laws and reorganization of the postal system, and a bill for a territorial form of government for

Plan for Retirement of Clerks. Bills for the retirement of superannuated government clerks are pretty sure to get early attention in both houses. The Gillett bill will be before the House with a favorable recommendation from the House committee on civil service.

Senator Cummins has announced that the committee on civil service of the upper house, of which he is chairman, will have a measure before the Senate in December. With President Taft and members of his cabinet back of legislation of this kind, it is hoped that not another session of Congress will adjourn without having put into operation some plan for the retirement of veteran government

There is a conflict of testimony in the case which seems difficult of solution. The negro's side of the case is that the Virginians have been after him for several days; that they have blackguarded him and threatened several times to do him severe bodily harm. As he passed his detachment he admits that he stepped H. L. Terry, state high school in-spector of Madison. Wis., before the a few feet over the line, but did not hear the challenge of Sentry Ernest M. Handy of Company B.

He says he continued down the which is a steep hill, and that the first thing he realized was that four men were after him with drawn bayonets. They came right up to him, he declares, and thinking that he was about to be stabbed, he drew his pistol and threatened to fire. He was placed under arrest by the officer of the guard.

Think Challenge Unheard.

Witnesses in other organizations say the negro did not step over the line any more than hundreds of others who have passed the same point, and they believe that the challenge was given in such a low tone that it was not heard. However that may be, it is a serious offense for a regular to draw his gun on another soldier, and it is very likely to go hard

The question of policing the camp is giving the staff a great deal of trouble Gen. Wotherspoon made arrangements with all the saloons of Gettysburg to close their places promptly at 11 o'clock each night. The request was complied with, and the general is disposed to think that the change will be beneficial.
